

- * it is a structural design pattern that provides a surrogate or a placeholder for another object to control access to it. It is commonly used to implement lazy loading, access control, logging or monitoring.
- Subject Interface: declares a common interface for RealSubject and Proxy.
  - Real Subject: the actual object that performs in the real operations.
  - Proxy: controls access to the RealSubject and may add additional functionality.